(KUTV) A big development for the city of Taylorsville kicked off Tuesday with the demolition of an old shopping area.

Buildings were knocked down at the shopping center at 5400 South and Redwood Road - all to get ready for the new Crossroads of Taylorsville shopping center.

Construction workers knocked down several buildings to get ready for a $30 million retail project that will include a luxury theater, new restaurants and new stores.

Taylorsville Mayor Larry Johnston says this is the beginning of a new era for Taylorsville. Johnston has lived in Taylorsville for almost 50 years, and says this shopping center used to be popular.

“We used to have over 99 percent business in here and now it's just mostly vacant,” Johnston said.

He explained other cities expanding with bigger shopping centers took the business from Taylorsville, but with this new development, Johnston believes the city will take it back.

“This will bring us back on the map where it used to be,” Johnson said.

William Stone, CEO of S Squared Development, which is heading the project, says the future of Taylorsville will change with this new shopping center.

“This signifies the revitalization, the rebirth of what used to be the family shops of what is now the Crossroads of Taylorsville,” Stone said.

Officials expect the theater and most of the shopping center will be opened up by Fall 2016.
